See the Skillbuilder difference!

One of the most essential pieces of baseball equipment is a baseball batting cage. Each Skillbuilder baseball batting cage, like all of our baseball equipment, is manufactured to our rigorous high standards. They are all put through the most intensive Ultra Violet (UV) treatment process available and heat set to get the maximum protection through each of our nets' fibers. Our nets will not bleed or rub off onto other materials. All of our nets have rope borders around the top, bottom and sides, and are tied into place to maximize the net's life. The top and bottom ropes extend up to 10' beyond each nets' borders to make it easy to secure it to one of our sturdy frames. 55' and 70' batting cage nets are available to fit our 12'Hx12'W and 12'Hx14'W frames.

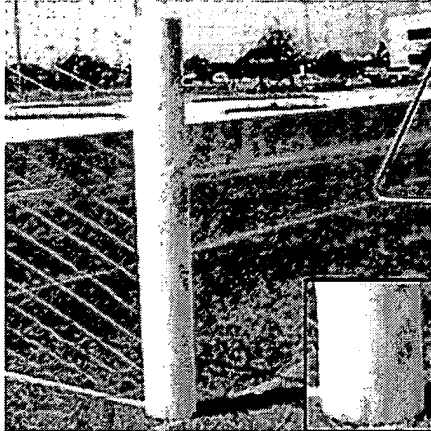

One of our most frequently asked questions regarding our batting cages is "How do nylon and poly nets compare?" Tests have shown that although nylon has a higher tensile strength, the abrasion factor of poly and nylon are equal. Because batting cages do not take direct hits, the abrasion resistance is much more important than tensile strength. Our poly nets work as well outdoors as indoors because they do not absorb water, as nylon does, and our resin treated UV coating protects them from the sun's harmful rays. In short, poly batting cages are just as durable as nylon, even more versatile and much more affordable. Numerous schools and colleges have purchased from us because of our high quality and low prices. Click here to view our batting cage nets and pricing! All our nets can be used with pitching machines but for pitching machines used at 80 mph and above, we recommend using the #36 twisted poly or nylon.
